

Australian immigration will open door to world-class education for your kids

If you are a teacher or/and you're considering immigration to Australia for your family, you could soon be faced with a government who is planning to give kids in Australia the best education in the world.

The world's friendliest country has long been one of the most popular places amongst overseas students to study abroad at.

The new Rudd Government has a vision for the Australian nation, which is to build the world's best education system. The Digital Education Revolution is the first step towards that plan.

If education is one of the primary influences on your immigration choice, Australia will not disappoint.

The Australian Government is in progress rolling out the $1 billion National Secondary School Computer Fund. In June this year, Round One of the Computer Fund will see the Rudd Government delivering $100 million to schools with the greatest need.

A critical first step, it will realise the Rudd Government's vision of a Digital Education Revolution.

But this is only the beginning. The Rudd Government has more plans in the pipeline to bring Australian schools into the 21st century, by ensuring that all students in years 9 to 12 have access to a computer to aid their learning.

Many parents going through the immigration process are drawn to Australia for its high regard for education. The fact that the Australian education system will soon be switched into the digital information age is not only in line with the Rudd Government's vision, but also that of many parents'.

People all over the world choose immigration because they want a better life for themselves and their family. Australia has long been one of the top countries of choice because of its booming economy, friendly nation, beautiful and unique natural scenery, fantastic job opportunities and world-class health and education system.

If you would like to explore the exciting possibilities the revolution is going to offer students and teachers across Australia, immigration to this country is definitely an option to consider.
