

Learning a 2nd language

Learning a new language is always a rather daunting task, which is probably why only a small minority of Britain's can speak a 2nd language besides English. Now, even the laziest of us Brits can learn a new language thanks to endless stream of resources available on the Internet.

The BBC in particular have put together a fantastic resource for young and old alike to get their brains stuck in to. Meanwhile the Guardian has an extensive section covering a wide breadth of topics on all things foreign language.

But it's a new emerging technology known as Dynamic Immersion which should really get your tongues wagging with some foreign lingo. Using a unique set of tools, the Dynamic Immersion software takes language lessons to a whole new level, with your computer manipulating the environment in which you learnt your first language.

The software currently serves over 30 different languages, including all of the common European languages such as German, Spanish and French.

While some have criticised that learning online can never replicate the classroom experience, it gives even those with the busiest of schedules the chance to learn a new language at their own pace. As a newcomer to a particular language, you use the software to listen to native speakers of a language and then check your own pronunciation against using state of the art voice recognition software.

About the Author

While this software does come at a cost, you can try the language learning software risk free thanks to a no quibbles money back guarantee. Try it for yourself and you too could learn Spanish or many other languages from tomorrow!

Source: <http://www.spivo.com/articles>