

Untangling the web

If you're in the market for a visa in Florida and don't know where to get the right type of information, contact Rifkin & Fox-Isicoff, P.A., attorneys who will provide you with the answers on any aspect of immigration and nationality law. This area of law is confusing at best, and can be more complicated depending on what type of Visa you require. Rather than run afoul of the many different requirements and restrictions when applying for a visa, take no chances and consult with an attorney who can put you on the right path.

Nonimmigrant visa categories are alphabetized from A to T, with each type having specific requirement and restrictions. It's these specific guidelines you need to be aware of in order to make a proper application. This is even more important if you are seeking employment in the United States.

If you want to do business in the US and are a foreign national, you can apply as a B-1 visitor for business. Your business in this case must be associated with international trade or commerce. This type of visa does not allow you to obtain employment in the country.

Does your country of residence already have a treaty of trade and commerce with the US? If the answer is yes, you can apply for an E-1 Treaty Trader Visa or for an E-2 Treaty Investor Visa. The Trader Visa means you conduct substantial trade between your country and the US. The Investor Visa means you must make a significant investment in US companies. Furthermore, employees who are nationals of the treaty country may be eligible for E status, which can be confirmed upon application. In this category, there is no maximum period allocated for residence in the US.

If you're a foreign student you may be eligible to apply for an F-1 Visa to allow you to continue your studies. You may get practical training employment authorization when you have completed your degree. The period of time allowed for your training would be one year. Although you don't have to work for a specific person or company, you must be hired in your field of study.
